Continued:

The plants within the netted environment contain a mix of young and mature blueberry bushes, this mix of age and variety provides variable crop yields and plant viability. Development has introduced through new varieties which is required to stay competitive and have flexibility in the business model. The area's soil type provides the ideal growing conditions and nutrients for blueberries, and this unit is also boosted by a good fertiliser regime. Due to favourable local conditions, the majority of New Zealand's blueberries are grown in the Waikato. With the country's blueberry industry spreading beyond domestic markets, it's an opportune time to expand operations or get involved in this superfoods continual demand.

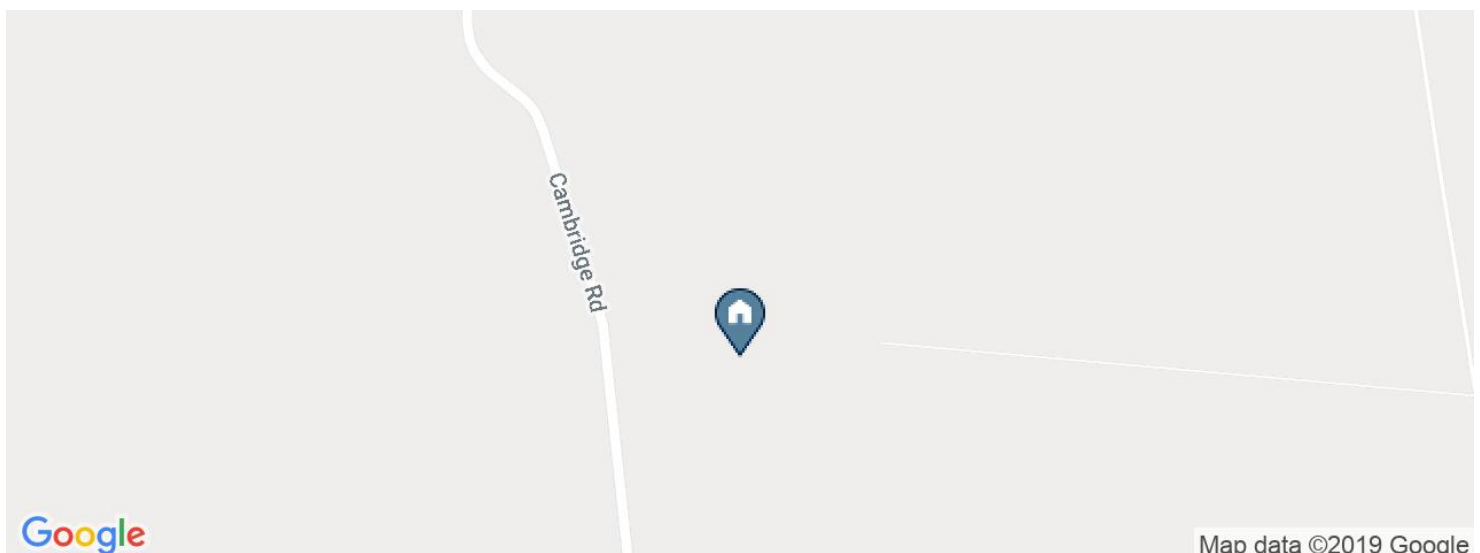

This property is currently integrated into a wider business unit, which is also being sold and can be viewed at the below links.
